John The Baptist

The image of John the Baptist on page 3 is an example of an icon. Icons are popular in the eastern churches and have been since the time of the early church fathers. The most popular icons were of Jesus, Mary and John the Baptist. Icons are images filled with symbolism.

At the top of the icon, the Slavic inscription reads: СВЯТЫЙ ИОАНН ПРЕДТЕЧА, “Saint John the Forerunner” a traditional title for John the Baptist, emphasizing his role as the one who prepared the way for Christ (cf. Isaiah 40:3; Matthew 3:3).

The angel wings emphasize his role as a messenger (Greek: angelos)—one sent by God to proclaim the coming of the Messiah (cf. Malachi 3:1, Matthew 11:10). This portrayal highlights his ascetic, prophetic, and divine mission. John is often shown with his right hand raised in a gesture of blessing or proclamation, symbolizing his role as a prophet and preacher calling people to repentance (cf. Matthew 3:2).

Often he holds a scroll (not seen here) bearing the words: “Behold, the Lamb of God” (Ecce Agnus Dei, John 1:29). In this icon, instead, he holds a slender cross-staff topped with a cross and possibly sprouting leaves, which symbolizes his prophetic authority, his role as a precursor to Christ’s passion (the cross), and in some interpretations, new life springing from repentance. The bowl or chalice containing the Christ Child is a striking and deeply theological symbol. The chalice refers to both the Eucharist and John’s role in preparing the way for Christ, who is the sacrificial Lamb.

The Christ child lying in the chalice represents the Lamb of God offered for the sins of the world. It is a symbol of the Eucharist and Christ’s sacrificial death, which John foretold.

It can also allude to John’s martyrdom, as icons of martyrs sometimes show them holding a chalice containing their own head or symbolic element of sacrifice. In John’s case, this emphasizes that he was martyred for truth and prepared the way for the sacrificial Lamb.

The halo around John’s head indicates holiness and sainthood—a universal element in iconography signifying divine light and favor. This icon is a visual homily on how John stands at the threshold between the Old and New Covenants, preparing hearts for the One who offers himself as eternal food and sacrifice.
